The Conning Tower

THE GRAND TOUR

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.

Lyrically, Salt Lake City was one of the first municipalities I ever heard of. Something like this the song went:

"McCloskey shouted and hollered in vain, But the mule he wouldn't stop; He threw Mary Jane right over his head

Into a policy snop. When McCloskey saw this horrible sight, His heart was moved with pity;

So he stabbed the mule with a caraway seed. And started for Salt Lake City."

Other versions insisted that McCloskey's weapon was "a bit of charcoal"; but I never liked that. It threw the accent on "coal," which is wrong; and it made a short syllable of "char," which is criminal, My only reason for citing the ballad at all is to prove that I entered Salt Lake City with an unprejudiced notion-rather with no notion. Salt Lake City to me was Mc-Closkey's western terminus, and it was nothing more.

But the Salt Lake City papers came on at Ogden; and a reading of them prejudiced me against the town. The Salt Lake Tribune, in one issue, was carrying advertisements of the following aids to health:
